International Conference Photography and History

The relationship between the photographic medium and the discipline of history has been a topic for theoretical speculation and a source for analogies and rapprochements since the second half of the 19th century. However, the debate around the role of images in historiography implies also countless frictions and silences.

If due to its acknowledged transparency and realism photography is apparently a privileged index, being frequently considered a paradigm for the craft of the historian, however, due to its stillness and fragmentary characteristics technical images have generate throughout the 20th century a considerable heuristic suspicion.

Even though photography has been mostly considered as a documental and utilitarian tool, the renovation that technical images convey to the conception of history itself has lagged behind the expectations foreseen by Walter Benjamin in the 1930s. To foster the debate on photography today, on its social uses, its circulation in a world of images with multiple meanings to history, aims at questioning concepts such as those of fact and event, visuality and truth, real and imaginary.

Hence the purpose of this conference is to envision the role of photography in different contexts – such as the institutional and personal archive, in social networks or in artistic practice –, as a means to stimulate history, here understood as a narrative that questions contemporaneity based on evidences and regimes of thought and visuality from the past.

The deadline for the present call for proposals is 1st July 2021. We invite proposals for a 20-minute presentation, from papers on the topic based on academic researches, to artistic objects and cultural practices examples, from various disciplines.

The conference will include public sessions and online panels.

Submitted proposals for presentations may address the following topics:

- Photography as an index and evidence.

Archives and iconographical sources: contributions and problematizations to history.

Circulation and mobilization of images: contributions for local history, in particular, within the Macaronesia region.

Photographies: their double objectual and imagery dimension – challenges for history.

- Photography as a model for history in modernity.

Photography and history in the works of Walter Benjamin and his contemporaries.

Technical image and the discipline of history in historiographical currents of the 20th century.

Photography, memory and history: intercrosses in the digital era.

- Photography in the post-photography era: disputes around history.

The concepts of fact, event, real and (post) truth considering images.

The contributions of memory and visual studies to the concept of history.

The mobilization of photography by the arts: meanings and strategies to overcome disclaimers.
